Richard Lück:

Today it was way too early to leave the house, but it didn't bother me too much. We had a long journey before us, but we could manage it. The way from Nuremberg has been quite long, but we made it. First impression: This is in a school building! Sudden flashbacks from my schooltime returned and we entered the building. A shit ton of books to check out and a neck turned at 90 degrees ... hurts.

But it's great fun and interesting to talk to the people. Looking forward to interesting talks.
Greetings and a good time. :)

Kees van Toorn:

It has been a long time since I wrote something. Times have changed. But some things never change. One thing is the warmth of people and their willingness at conventions to talk, be friendly and most of all are willing to make new friendships. And Fandom is a long road. Together with many friends and an occasional foe. But it has been a nice road.
Let us hope the road will be a bit longer and that all of us will walk it in good health. Thank you, Ecki, and live long and prosper.

Peter De Weerd:

Update on previous message. We found out that the book is no longer available. All copies here are sold. I do not know if you can pre-order another copy. Only time travel can solve the problem if you want a copy this day but ...
The time sto
We have to restart time, but will everything be the same?

Silke Lühr-Jacobsen:

I miss Rubino.
Live in Space exists. The English word for "Bremse" is called "horsefly".
I have eaten a good meal in the Australian Bar in Kuckelke 22.

Gabriele Behrend:

I am overwhelmed by the atmosphere, it seems that you enjoy your time here. Which makes me happy as can be. In a few minutes starts another programme item for a peaceful mind: Perry Rhodan in Concert! With two new compositions, which weren't performed before. So be curious!

Matthew Kunkel:

There are erotic moments in science fiction.
Between men and women, between aliens and humans. Erotic with more than two beings, or less.
